(January 2018) (Learn how and when to delete this template message) In Westport, Connecticut, Augie and Isolde Poole celebrate their fifth wedding anniversary by turning in an application to the Rock-a-Bye adoption agency. Encouraged by their friends and neighbors, Dick and Alice Pepper, who have three children and another because, Isolde, who has failed in their attempts to conceive, are determined that she and Augie will eventually become parents. While awaiting news of the application to the agency, Isolde decides that she and Augie should continue to try to have children on their own, and she enthusiastically follows all the latest advice from pregnancy experts. Although exhausted by Isolde's determination, Augie worries about having a child while living on Isolde's family money as he struggles to make a success as a serious cartoonist. Dick, editor of The Townsman magazine, assures Augie that his publication would gladly hire Augie to write gags, but Isolde insists that Augie hold out for a more important offer. Dick criticizes Augie for being too serious, compared to his own light-hearted manner, which, to Augie's dismay, includes eternal infidelity. One afternoon a few weeks after their application, Estelle Novick, a striking young representative from Rock-a-Bye, visits poole's neighborhood. After finding out about Estelle's presence from other neighbors, Alice takes Isolde home to dress her properly for the interview. When Estelle arrives at Poole's house, Augie is unaware of her identity and, believing she works for a local charity, drinks two cocktails and behaves casually. Doris Day, Richard Widmark and Gig Young When Dick comes over and does a pass at Estelle, but she is upset and reveals her identity. Remind the men that Dick is Poole's reference. waves aside side abominable excuses and insists that she must report her findings to the Agency. When Estelle departs as soon as Isolde returns, Isolde is injured and angry with Augie and goes home with Alice. Dick tries to comfort Augie by suggesting that Augie might relax if he had an affair, but when Augie scoffs, Dick offers him sedatives and leaves. Moments later, Estelle returns to Pooles, apologizes for her serious behavior and accepts the cocktail Augie offered her earlier. Given Dick's advice and the devising of Isolde's anger, Augie is brave to ask Estelle for dinner. While driving into town, however, Augie panics and takes one of Dick's tranquilizers. Later, when Augie gets drowsy, Estelle drives him to a motel and checks him into a room to let him sleep off the pill effect. The next morning, Augie is humiliated to find herself at the motel and, finding a note from Estelle thanking him for his kindness, thinks he has cheated on Isolde. Three months later, Isolde is disheartened for not hearing anything from Rock-a-Bye or any of the other adoption agencies. Augie visits Dick and confesses the incident with Estelle, from which he has just received a call informing him that she is pregnant and leaving the area for her captivity. Afraid that she will demand money, Augie pleads with Dick to hire him at the newspaper, then give him a thousand dollars advance. Later that day, Estelle drops off visiting Pooles to advise them that she believes in a few months they can finally have their baby. Isolde is excited about the news and Augie is quietly announcing her new job with Dick's magazine. Alone with Estelle later, Augie presses money on her, then demands an explanation. Estelle promises to repay the loan, then declares that she owes Pooles for all Augie's help to her. A few months later, Dick and Alice throw Augie and Isolde a party in anticipation of the arrival of the new baby. While dancing with Dick, Isolde confides that she has found a mysterious thousand dollar imbalance in Poole's finances. Realize this must be the money Augie has given Estelle, Dick invents a story about losing an investment in the stock market and Augie giving him a loan. Surprised but satisfied, Isolde asks for the money to be refunded for the preparation of the child. That night, Isolde Augie talks about the bank's imbalance and, panicked, Augie hastily admits that he borrowed money from Dick several times and paid back in full when he was employed. Sure that Augie covers for Dick, the next day Isolde tells Alice, who promises to repay the money. A few weeks later, Miss MacCracken from Rock-a-Bye phones to schedule a visit. Unnerved, Augie wonders if he would confess everything to Isolde. Miss MacCracken arrives and informs Isolde and Augie that a baby has just been born and they have been moved to the top of the agency's list. Happy, Augie and Isolde welcome baby boy to his home days later, and soon everyone notices similar to Augie. Weeks afterward, as the physical similarity grows, Isolde becomes suspicious. When Isolde has Augie's baby picture blown up and Alice mistakes it for the baby, Isolde furiously accuses Augie of infidelity and explains that she is leaving him. As Isolde packs, Miss MacCracken returns to do an inspection of the couple's first month with the child. Realizing that the couple do, she explains that she has to make a report to the agency, but Augie pleads for a week and Miss MacCracken agrees. Desperate to stop Isolde from leaving, Augie then admits the incident with Estelle. Just then, however, Estelle will congratulate Pooles, repay augie the loan and share a photo of the baby she had who is a girl. This confirms Augie and Estelle did not sleep together. The child is Estelle's of her husband whom she joins in Australia. Cast Doris Day as Isolde Poole Richard Widmark as August 'Augie' Poole Gig Young as Dick Pepper Gia Scala as Estelle Novick Elisabeth Fraser as Alice Pepper Elizabeth Wilson as Miss MacCracken Vikki Dougan as Gladys Dunne's Broadway production of the play starred Tom Ewell, Nancy Olson and Darren McGavin. Glenn Ford was originally supposed to appear opposite Day but later dropped out of production due to commitments to two other projects. Problematic circumstances Kelly's highlight year at MGM came to one with this film, which was the last in his contract. He had been looking for more opportunities to direct and new MGM boss (and Kelly fan) Benny Thau needed someone to deal with the film, so it was a beneficial collaboration for both of them. But there were conditions. Thau stipulated that Kelly had to make the film in black and white, with just one primary set, shooting it in just three weeks and at a cost of less than $500,000. Kelly succeeded, completing the film on time and within budget. Still, it didn't perform well at the box office, for reasons that Kelly later revealed in The Films of Gene Kelly: Song and Dance Man: This is no criticism of Richard Widmark, who is one of the finest film actors we have and who actually began his stage career playing light comic parts. It is simply that the public fixes an impression of an actor, they accept him in a certain guise and they do not like him to deviate too far from it. Widmark had established himself in serious material and they were not prepared to accept him in this light, sexy part. The public creates type casting, not the actors - unfortunately. Kelly would go on to direct several other films, most notably the romantic comedy musical film Hello, Dolly! (1969) starring Barbra Streisand, who was nominated for an Academy Award for Best Picture. Production The only major change Fields made in his script adaptation was an explanation that Augie Poole is not the father of Estelle's children. In the play, Estelle Augie deliberately seduces to get pregnant so she can experience firsthand information of unmarried mothers, the subject of her doctoral thesis, which, as in the film, she reveals that she works part-time. Release Box office According to MGM records the film earned $1.75 million in the United States and Canada and $940,000 elsewhere resulting in a loss of $701,000. [1] Critical response In a 1958 review by the New York Times, Bosley Crowther OH, what they say, wrote those shameless people, in M-G-M's The Tunnel of Love, a comedy that bores through the shifting sands of marriage in the modern suburb! Such blunt words as Kinsey and pregnant and even aphrodisiac drop from the lips of the characters in unembarrassed loquacity. And what they are sincerely discussing in this new movie on Roxy-well! We blush to have to tell you, but it's philoprogenitiveness. He also wrote that all the commotion and inconvenience is spent over a smaller gag that wears very thin before the finish. It's a little accident, just updated a little. [3] Hemmedia On April 7, 2009, Turner Entertainment released the film on DVD as part of the Doris Day Spotlight Collection. The five-disc set includes digitally remastered versions of It's a Great Feeling (1949), Tea for Two (1950), Starlift (1951) and April in Paris (1952).
